The Ashland (Ky.) News of the 38th, contains the following: "Rev. Mr. Strouse, the great evangelist, great from the mere sense that he is, an instrument in the hands of the Lord for accomplishing so much good, preached one of his best sermons last night to a crowded house. Every conceivable space was occupied, the aisles were filled space was occupied, the assess were filed with chairs and stools, and many came bringing their chairs with them, and others borrowed stools and boxes from the stores near by. It is not a meeting of excitement and emotion, but the whole town is awakened to feel and know their dury. It is the regret of whole town is awakened to feel and know their duty. It is the regret of every one that Rev. Mr. Strouse is to leave us this evening, and it is the hope of every one that Rev. Mr. Strouse may be able at some future time to again visit our city."

Deputy Marshal Greene Tuesday night brought to Salem J. A. Poytress from Roanoke, where he was arrested on the charge of stealing a package from the La Crosse postoffice, in Brunswick county. LOADING DICE.

An Industry That Once Flourished In Per fection In a Tennessee Town. A reporter noticed in a shop window a fir of dice. They were innocent looking pair of dice. They were innocent looking little white bones, and he had quite forgot-ten them when the proprietor remarked, "Them's leaded."

What's loaded?"

"Why, the dice."
"Oh," the reporter ejaculated. The proprictor picked up the dice, and throwing them on the counter said, "Come seven," and sure enough seven came. Some on else pitched them, and five turned up, but before he could make another five to gain his point that fatal seven showed its face again, and so it went, the five and the two making the seven three out of five shots. "There are only two men in the city who can or will load dice," the proprietor explained. "Before Jones turned loose on the gam-blers one could get $5 and $6 for loading a pair of dice, and if the job was difficult you could get even more than that, but now $3 is a very good price, and there is less to do than there once was at any price.

"These were loaded for a regular gambling house, and a crack shot will never recognize the iron. To do the job right requires a good deal of skill and pains. You bore the eye and pour in your mercury or beat in your lead. If you use mercury, it must be in the form of quicksilver. Rierunst be in the form of quicksilver. Mer-ury is probably the best, though a tiny lead shot will answer the propose of the ordinary dice. You then take a bit of ivery, and fitting form the plug countersink the eye. If the leader understands his busi-ness, there is no professional who can de-tect the fraud. Not to make the weight suspicious you can bore and leave hollow that side of the die for which it is leaded. "Sometimes there is hig money in the

"Sometimes there is big money in the business. About a year ago, when dice were the rage with gentlemen of the green cloth, a party of local gamblers sent all the way to Colorado for an expert to come and do their little trick. He came, and in one night he and his crowd did one game for #83,000. The next day he returned to the Black Hills. That man was once a noted gambler in this city. It was about this time that Chiof Adkins, after having made a raid on some notorious dive, placed on exhibition a pair of loaded dice cut in halves.

"Speaking of the price of dice, $5 or $6 is lotting them off light. In some cities where the dice are loaded in a professional way, not to order, but for regular sale, dice that without the lead are worth about 30 cents with lead will cost you $18. But, after all, that isn't much, for the man with handles them visit is continued. who handles them right is soon 'in.' ".

One Was For Declining and the Other For Accepting the Laurenteship.

Peel has not read a syllable of Tennyson. But Milnes showed him "Looksley Hall" and "Ulysses," and the pension of £200 was immediately granted. And now, on the death of Wordsworth, another prime minister has to admit that he known path. minister has to admit that he knows nothing whatever about Tennyson. Lord John

Russell wrote to Rogers:
"As you would not wear the laurel yourself I have mentioned to the queen those whom I thought most worthy of the those whom I thought most worthy of the honor. Her majesty is inclined to bestow it on Mr. Tennyson, but I should wish, before the offer is made, to know something of his character, as well as of his literary merits. I know your opinion of the last by your advice to Sir Robert Peel, but I should be glad if you could let me know something of his character and position." sition.

This is indeed quaint. But no doubt Rogers was equal to the situation. More than six months passed after Wordsworth's death before the office was filled up, but the offer came to Tennyson at last. He has himself given a curious account of the way in which he received it. He told his friend Mr. Knowles:

The night before I was asked to take "The night before I was asked to take the laureateship, which was offered to me through Prince Albert's liking for my 'In Memoriam,' I dreamed that he came to me and kissed me on the cheek. I said in my dream, 'Very kind, but very German,' I the manufact he letter should in my dream, 'Very kind, but very German.' In the morning the letter about the laureateship was brought to me and laid upon my bed. I thought about it through the day, but could not make up my mind whether to take it or refuse it, and at last I wrote two letters, one acceptant of the man and can dealining and throw them on ing and one declining, and threw them on the table, and settled to decide which I would send after my dinner and bottle of

It is rather curious that Tennyson, in his first appearance at court, exactly followed Wordsworth's precedent. He dressed at Rogers', and wore the old poet's court suit just as Wordsworth had done. "I well remember," says Sir Henry Taylor, "a dinner in St. James place, when the question arose whether Samuel's suit was spacious enough for Alfred." laureate managed to make it do.

Of Tennyson, merely as laurente, there is fortunately little to say. He did not write much in his official capacity. The Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington" would probably have been writ-ten even if Tennyson had never had anything to do with the lord chamberlain. was not because he was a laureate that Tennyson was a patriot. His other pieces, on royal weddings and so forth, are slight and unimportant.—Temple Bar.

My DEAR PEOPLE—As some concern has been expressed by scale of you because I have patronized and attended the Queen's theater, now staying in this village, it may be well for me to give an explanation of my so doing. I am responsible before God for doing all I can and giving every expectation. parronized gad attended the Queen's theater, now staying in this village, it may be well for me to give an explanation of my so doing. I am responsible before God for doing all I can and giving overy opportunity to all in this parish to be brought under the influence of the Holy Spirit. A theatrical company comes into this place with every probability of staying some time. They do not come here to break either the laws of God or man. Their profession is quite a lawful one. Now if every one who is respectable keeps away from these places what will they become? Centers of sin! Whose fault is it, then, that this is the case! Is it the fault of the company who come here to amuse the people? I say it is not. It is the fault of those persons who think themselves too respectable to "go to such a place." The proprietor of a company like this here now is only too thankful to have the help of good people to raise his performance and make it of a more refined and improved character. What a pity it is that some of our people are such cowards that they must set upon our young men and boys instead of conting to me. If I am doing wrong, why don't they come and tell me and teach me better, instead of throwing their sneers out at those who can't help what I do. "He's a nice sort of leader," they say, but those who say these things are not those who would be led anywhere better. Another thing they say is, "He would not do it, only he wants some money out of them." This is one of those thumping lies that people like to say about a parson. Well, let them say it. It won't hurt the parson, and it pleases them.

New York Stock Market.

New York, Jan. 29.—The speculative movement in stocks to-day was not attended by any news of a general bearing and the widest fluctuations that were recorded were unexplained, except in so far as professional manipulation was concerned. This was especially true of Sugar, which by far outranked any of the other leading stocks in point, of activity and advance and Tobacco, which came second in both respects. There was not even a vestige of gessip regarding either of the stocks mentioned. The initial prices were generally at slight concessions from yesterday's closing figures and in the early dealings pressure was noted against the grangers. The tone of the market soon changed to positive strength and, under heavy purchases for both accounts advances occurred in the active list ranging up to 2 per cent. with the Coalers, Tobacco, Sugar and St. Paul leading.

HERE'S A QUEER ARGUMENT.

A traveling theatrical company recently arrived on an extended visit to Killamarsh, an important colliery center in Derbyshire. The rector, the Rev. F. J.
